

The Reader

(advertisement)

Looking for a book

In the old days, we would sometimes wait for years to find the out-of-print book we sought. We'd search every used book store we chanced on in the hopes of discovering a copy of the missing volume in our collection.

The advent of the internet has changed that—some would say for the better and some, not so much. On the plus side, it is now possible to access bookstores all over the world without leaving home. However, some of the pleasure of the hunt is lost. Think of all of the great finds you've made while searching for that book—call them collateral discoveries.

Of course some of us, while we do have lists of wants, love the serendipity of coming across a book we didn't even know we wanted or needed.

Finding the book

If you really can't wait, here are some ways to find that book you need:

www.abebooks.com - the largest used books website; thousands of sellers (including Chelsea Books)

www.usedbookcircle.com - send a request to your local used bookstores call Chelsea Books - we can help if you've run out of other options

Livres Chelsea Books
101 Old Chelsea Road
819-827-7752

www.chelseabooks.ca

Open Thursday-Saturday
11 am - 6 pm

N.B. Closed Saturday Nov.14